THURSDAY MORNING, SEPTEMBER 28, 1916

Good home-training means bringing up children in surroundings which quietly and persistently illustrate the principles taught by word of mouth; where unselfishness is not only heard of but seen every day.

Edward Lyttleton.

A Hidden Provision

The congress in its last session appropriated more than $2,000,000,000 for the conduct of the government during the next year. Many persons not yet very old can well remember when democratic statesmen and newspapers were horrified at the proceedings of a republican "billion dollar congress." The gigantic appropriations of the late session have been excused on the ground of the great and unusual provisions that have been made for the national defense. These provisions amount to about $700,000,000, leaving $1,300,000,000 yet for the ordinary conduct of the government.

Yet it will not be forgotten that other administrations have included in their much smaller appropriations something for the national defense. It appears, therefore, that it has cost this administration for the ordinary, current expenses of government much more than any of its predecessors.

The foregoing observations, though, are only preliminary to a statement that a considerable part of our expensive defense legislation has been already proved to be foolishly inadequate. The army extension bill, for instance, creates only an army on paper and not a very large army, either. Yet it is so large that the administration is not able to fill it. Under the provisions of the Hay bill it has been found necessary to resort to the payment to postmasters of $5 a head for recruits. Within the last week two postmasters have claimed this reward for their services. In most quarters the telegraphic announcement last week that the government had been forced to avail itself of that provision of the army bill was received as conclusive evidence of the breakdown of the volunteer system which had just failed miserably in Great Britain.

The democratic administration and congress must have been aware that the system would not stand the stress, for they caused to be inserted in the Hay bill a standing authority to the president to conscript. That authority is conferred in the following language:

"If for any reason there shall not be enough volunteer enlistments to keep the reserve battalions at the prescribed strength, a sufficient number of the unorganized militia shall be called into the service of the United States to maintain each of such battalions at the proper strength."

The "unorganized militia," it should be understood, means all male citizens, with certain exemptions, between the ages of 18 and 45.

The foregoing clause has been described as a "joker." At any rate, in the long discussion of the bill in congress, it escaped general attention. It seemed to fit in and harmonize with its surroundings and did not appear to be in any way more significant than the enacting clause. We who have favored compulsory military training and service are not entirely out of sympathy with the object sought by the clause. We can complain only of the stealthy manner of its insertion. It would have been much more to the credit of the administration and congress if they had been honest; if they had admitted their recognition of the failure of the volunteer system and had courageously provided for universal compulsory military training and service.

Any president, however great the need of the country, would hesitate to resort to this obscure, purposely concealed provision, and, if at last, he should be driven to do so, we should find that after all, he had filled the skeleton of a very small army with untrained men. It is certain that no president will ever avail himself of this provision in a time of peace. If he should do so in time of war, we should face the enemy with our present ridiculously small army plus the conscripts from the "unorganized militia," who had had no previous training—raw recruits.

Women and Parties

Under the head of "Suffragists Non-Partisan," our neighbor, the Arizona Star, remarks:

Men can be led by women but not driven. It pleases them to be asked to help women; it angers them to be bulldozed by women. If women suffragists helped one party and fought the other, the antagonism of the opposition party might last longer than the gratitude of the party they helped, and do them more harm than their friends could remedy.

It would be an ill omen for the future political life of the nation if women once grouped themselves into a separate party, to wield the balance of power for their own purposes, no matter how laudable their ultimate objects might be.

It was made pretty clear by Miss Helen Todd in her able and witty address on Wednesday night that the women's movement is non-partisan. They are engaged in a work that is above and beyond any party lines. They are working within any party field that promises them the best results. They are not republicans, but they are supporting Mr. Hughes because of his promises with, back of them, a record of fulfillment of his pledges. They are opposing Mr. Wilson because of his insincerity if not his active hostility to their cause.

The women have no concern in any quarrel between the two parties. They are neither republicans nor democrats, but they have an issue which they believe overshadows and dwarfs any issue between the two parties. It appears to them that through the republican party their aim may be reached. It has not been reached during four years of democratic control of the government in its executive and legislative branches. Nor is any hope held out that in four years more of democratic control would national woman suffrage be brought nearer a successful end.

The women have nothing to hope or fear from the democratic party, which has already done its worst to their cause, so that its further antagonism is not to be dreaded. The women, it is true, do not know what a republican congress may do, but they know what to expect of Mr. Hughes.

An Erroneous Report

There is one good work in which all Arizonians who write letters may join. It is reported to the state fair commission from points in the middle west that local papers have printed statements that the Arizona state fair buildings have been destroyed by fire and that in consequence there will be no fair in this state this year. This report probably had its basis in the fact that a part of the California state fair buildings were recently destroyed by fire.

The persons who would be chiefly influenced by such a report are horsemen and other exhibitors, some of whom have written to the commission to know whether there will be a fair this year. Others may assume the report that there will not be, to be true and make no inquiry.

Every Arizonian who may be writing to friends "back home" should ask them to try to secure corrections in their local papers of the rumors of the destruction of the fair buildings by fire, and, incidentally, a statement that Arizona is going to have a bigger and better fair than ever.

A Boomerang Argument

George Creel has written a little book relative to the rise and decline of the progressive party, in which he is exceedingly bitter against Colonel Roosevelt. If in his attacks upon Mr. Roosevelt it is his intention to persuade progressives to vote for Mr. Wilson, he has overshot his mark. The moral which he draws from the failure of an effort to create a third party is that the safety of the democratic institution is best assured by devotion to principles and not by devotion to personalities.

Obviously, if the progressives made a mistake in relying too much on Mr. Roosevelt they would be repeating the same mistake by supporting Mr. Wilson. The only excuse for an appeal for progressive support for Mr. Wilson is that he is better than his party and that by the force of his influence he has swung legislation from that party which has for its sole object the winning of progressive votes.

The democratic party in congress passed laws contrary to its beliefs and principles because the president insisted that without them he could not be elected. But nobody who observed the temper in which this was done needs to be told that with the election safely over, Mr. Wilson would plead in vain for legislation along progressive lines.

In his latest speech the president repeats what he said in the early days of the railroad controversy and which he learned by rote from the railroad leaders, that the eight-hour day was not arbitrable. But why the eight-hour day? Would not a six or a four-hour day be as non-arbitrable a subject?

President Wilson's "humanity," which had been worn threadbare by him within the last two years, was torn to tatters by Miss Helen Todd on Wednesday night. At the same time she removed the oleaginous mask from Mr. Bryan and disclosed a shrewd and shallow politician.

The railroad men in Wales who were threatening to strike have taken a second thought and have agreed to arbitrate. No, Wales is not a part of the United States.

The preacher who advised the members of his congregation not to make enemies neglected to tell them how that was to be avoided without becoming human sheep.

Instead of reducing the size of the loaf of bread, why do not the bakers teach the public how to curtail its appetite?

Those long Greek names add one more to the headline writer's already long list of grievances.

WARMS HOUSE BY SUN'S RAYS

"Bottled Sunshine" is what Albert Barnes, a local machinist and a genius, calls his new invention—a calorific contrivance which he uses to heat his house in winter and to do the washing, ironing and all other household tasks requiring stored force.

On the hottest days in summer Mr. Barnes catches the rays of the sun at the focus of a bright tin roof on his house and conveys the heat to his barn, which he has remodeled into an immense model of a fireless cooker box. In this building great squares of artificial stone are placed and the heat is stored within these big disks. These are closely packed inside bales of pressed straw. The stones hold more than 1,200,000 calories of heat, sufficient to heat his house all winter and to supply all needed extra heat.

Mr. Barnes claims that it took only ten days last summer to charge his hot storage plant. The idea for the contrivance originated with Mr. Barnes when he was trying to paint the roof of his house on a hot day. Finding such great heat on the tin he was curious to know if food could be cooked there and taking a beefsteak to the roof he left it. After a wait of an hour he crawled to the top of the house and found the steak cooked to a crisp. This incident gave him the idea for his storage plant.

Hundreds of visitors are viewing the dish-shaped roof, the hothouse and heating system at the home of Mr. Barnes, who says that as there is no meter on the sun he does not expect to pay a cent for heat the remainder of his life.—Toledo Blade.

PAPER MONEY IN FRANCE

Gold is no longer in circulation in France and silver is very scarce. The currency is paper, but where the lowest paper bill was formerly 50 francs or $10, today there are bills in circulation with a face value as small as 5 francs. To remedy the shortage in change the government has authorized chambers of commerce in the different departments of France to issue small notes or bills. This small change currency ranges from 2 francs or 40 cents, down to 25 centimes or 5 cents.

NEW ZEALAND WOOLS FOR ENGLAND

New Zealand authorities have been requested by the English government to see that all crossbred wools are shipped to Great Britain. Heretofore, licenses were possible, permitting shipments of wool to countries other than England, but no permits had been granted recently.

GERMANY ACQUIRING AMERICAN CREDIT
A New York banker says that German banks are building up great balances in this country so that at the end of the war, when there will be need of bolstering up both the nation's credit and her currency system, the gold supplies of the United States may be drawn upon.

HUNT EFFECTS CONTROLS SESSION
DEMOCRATIC CENTRAL COMMITTEE

The Hunt wing of the democratic party completely controlled the meeting of the democratic central committee yesterday, rode rough shod over every objection made by the conservative element, and generally conducted things as they pleased.

To start with, without consulting any of the outside counties, George J. Stoneman, an avowed Hunt supporter, was elected chairman. The other element did not care much about that, they were willing to let the Hunt faction have their way in this matter without a fight. When it came to the election of a secretary, the fight started. Earlier in the day, so it is claimed by the conservatives, the Hunt people had agreed to run a dark horse and leave T. T. Powers, the governor's chief henchman out of the matter. But a consultation with the governor during the noon hour revealed the fact that the chief executive insisted that his man be put in and that none other would do. Powers was placed in nomination and to show that they still had some fight in them the conservative county delegation decided to nominate M. Joe Murphy to oppose him. Powers beat Murphy by seven votes.

The election of Powers served to widen the breach to such an extent between the two factions that the Maricopa delegation of 21 members left the meeting in a body and failed to show up the rest of the afternoon.

For God's Sake

After the election of officers, a recess was taken in order to give Chairman Stoneman an opportunity to find out where he was. At the sound of the gavel, Mr. Stoneman announced that he would name a committee to draft the party platform in the name of the committee, Wiley C. Jones, Chairman, Senator Ashurst, Mulford Winsor, Mrs. Pauline O'Neill and M. J. Dougherty.

Stoneman then announced that he would entertain a motion to adjourn until ten o'clock this morning in order that the committee might have time to prepare the platform. Mr. Winsor, a member of the committee, gained his feet, and explained that as the drafting of the platform was the most important thing the democrats had before them, it would take at least 24 hours to accomplish the task, and suggested that the hour of reconvening be made four o'clock this afternoon.

"Well for God's sake," said Dr. Simpson, of Navajo county, "if that committee can't get their work done in less than that, I suggest that another one be appointed. I amend the motion to make the time twelve o'clock. Then the fun started, there were amendments to the amendments, until at last all semblance of parliamentary order was lost. At last a compromise was arrived at, the time being one o'clock this afternoon.

WOOL EXPERT

The meeting in Arizona will be held under the auspices of the co-operative extension service of the agricultural department of the University of Arizona.

Sheepmen of the valley who wish Prof. Rich to visit their place, please advise the chamber of commerce, Phoenix, Phone 1294.

DRIVER MADE EFFORT TO AVOID COLLISION

The driver of the auto truck belonging to the Rabbit-Poison company, which figured in the accident Wednesday evening, in which Bayfield Schreiber was slightly injured, was in no way to blame for the unfortunate occurrence, is the consensus of opinion of those who either witnessed the accident or were on the scene shortly after it occurred.

It seems that the truck was running north of Central avenue, while the motorcycle upon which Schreiber was riding the tandem was coming east on Adams street, the motorcycle attempted to swing out around another machine running beside it. In doing so, the driver of the motorcycle saw the big truck and he could not throttle down, he had collided with the heavy truck.

The driver of the truck, Roy Winton, who is said to be one of the careful drivers in the state, saw the coming collision, and did everything in his power to avert it. The truck is as easily handled as a touring car, and in an effort to avoid the threatened collision, Winton drew sharply to the right actually throwing the heavy truck across the curb, driving it out onto East Adams street where he stopped it. His quick action probably saved the lives of both young men, as they were headed directly into the truck. As it was, the motorcycle hit it a glancing blow, throwing both the young men from it to the pavement.

KIBBEY SAYS G. O. P.
HAS CLEANED HOUSE

(Special Correspondence)
WICKENBURG, Sept. 28.—President Woodrow Wilson slipped into the back door while the republican party was effecting a thorough house-cleaning," declared Governor J. H. Kibbey, republican candidate for United States senator, here tonight before more than 250 people, that filled the opera house. "And the house-cleaning has been thoroughly completed," continued Arizona's best loved chief executive.

"The time is now highly opportune, in fact it is necessary that the democrats put into action a similar cleaning out of many undesirable and dominating elements in the party. Have they got the nerve to make a sacrifice to accomplish this desired end, I believe that the more conservative, but yet constructive minds in the party are entirely willing to do this.

Regarding the claim of the democrats that they have executed their promises and pledges, Governor Kibbey called attention to the plank in the platform on which President Wilson was elected calling for but a single term. This was to have been made a law by the Wilson administration, according to pre-election pledges in 1912, but now the president is again seeking office. Free tolls for American ships in coastwise trade through the Panama canal was another democratic pledge, yet Wilson, at the demand of England, refused to grant this privilege to our ships. These and other failures were cited by Judge Kibbey in one of his most stirring addresses of the present campaign.

"The democratic state administration has given us nothing but 'fads,' 'fancies' and 'blythings,' he charged in conclusion, and his assertion was greeted by a vociferous

Joe V. Prochaska, Gila county's candidate for secretary of state on the republican ticket was also one of the speakers. Mr. Prochaska made an earnest and sincere plea for a business-like administration of this important state office. He convinced his audience of his eminent qualifications to successfully conduct the affairs in an efficient manner.

Norman J. McKenna, republican candidate for state mine inspector, who is the only real mining expert with a practical knowledge of mine work seeking this office, briefly stated his claims for support.

Oscar Roberts, republican candidate for sheriff of Maricopa county, explained the workings of the sheriff's office, where he served as under-sheriff for two years. Mr. Roberts accompanied the Kibbey party to this city from Phoenix in the "safety first" car.

W. F. Marsh, republican candidate for state representative acted as chairman at the meeting and also delivered a short address. Mr. Marsh is one of the best known men in this section of Maricopa county.

The campaign party arrived here late this afternoon just in time to be escorted about the little city before the meeting. Stops were made during the afternoon at Peoria and
